Peter Tertzakian has a book entitled A Thousand Barrels A Second: The Coming Oil Break Point and the Challenges Facing an Energy Dependent World. Tertzakian attempts to stake out a position in the middle ground between "peak oil being an imminent threat and we're all going to die" and "peak oil is not going to be a problem, leave me alone."

Dave has written a really solid review of the book for Matt Savinar's blog that you should go read. The review contains all the relevant links for the book. Anyone else read this yet?
