

Peak Oil Media

Posted by Prof. Goose on June 17, 2007 - 12:27pm

Topic: Alternative energy

Tags: gas, gas prices, gasoline, james kunstler, john kilduff, matthew simmons, oil, oil prices, peak oil, roscoe bartlett, saudi arabia, t. boone pickens, tom udall
[list all tags]

Here's three four pieces of media that you can send to folks to explain the basic arguments regarding peak oil. First is Matt Simmons on CNBC a month ago talking about the GAO report (7 mins), then under the fold a link to Jim Kunstler's latest talk (which is great), a piece by ABC Radio of Australia on the GAO report and peak oil, and Boone Pickens on the issue as well.

"The GAO report found no focussed coordinated government plans to prepare for peak oil or other supply disruptions."

"We are on the verge of replacing the term 'global warming' with the term 'peak oil.'"

"The best new oil basin we will ever find is the one called 'conservation.'"

And then, James Howard Kunstler, author of The Long Emergency, speaks to the Commonwealth Club of California (.mp3 warning) about the American car culture and our illusions of maintaining it with alternative fuels. (thanks to Global Public Media). (It's about one hour.)

I found this presentation on the GAO report by ABC Radio International out of Australia on the GAO report and the topic of peak oil (which kindly mentions TOD, thanks!) presented by Paul Barclay featuring Michael Lardelli (5 minutes).

and then Boone Pickens (8-ish minutes):

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Share Alike 3.0 United States License.