

Weekend Open Thread...What Have You Done Locally This Week?

Posted by Glenn on October 26, 2007 - 4:33pm in The Oil Drum: Local

Topic: Policy/Politics

We need to hear about people's energy and environmental policy ideas, experiences, and solutions at the local and state level so we can compare notes and learn about policy successes and failures, and learn about how to be better participants in the local political process and better your own situation.

That is what we envision with TOD:Local...a place where you can discuss your experiences and and learn about ideas and insights about local solutions.

Something that we've known for a while is that most of the changes that occur in energy policy are going to occur at the state or local level--that's where a lot of the changes that are going to most affect our daily lives are going to take place--whether they are good policy or bad.

Please send your posts or story ideas to Glenn (click his name) or to the TOD eds box.

And here's an open thread to start things off...what did you learn about this week? any successes? failures?

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Share Alike 3.0 United States License.